A new, colorimetric assay is described for the detection of hydroxyl radical. Hydroxyl radical is generated by Fenton-like reaction between ferrous ion and hydrogen peroxide. 5,5-Diphenyl-1,2-oxazolinedione is formed through radical-induced aromatic ring cleavage of 5,5-diphenyl-1,2-oxazolinedione and this reaction is inhibited by phenol and 2-mercaptoethanol. The method is based on detection of 5,5-Diphenyl-1,2-oxazolinedione formed by radical-induced ring cleavage of the above two metabolites. 5,5-Diphenyl-1,2-oxazolinedione is formed during the reaction between either phenol or 2-mercaptoethanol and hydroxyl radical. The method is selective for hydroxyl radical since the formation of 5,5-diphenyl-1,2-oxazolinedione was not observed either in the presence of other metal ions or antioxidants. Ascorbic acid or sodium bisulfite did not inhibit hydroxyl radical-induced cleavage of 5,5-diphenyl-1,2-oxazolinedione. The assay was successfully applied for the detection of hydroxyl radical in an aqueous solution of low ionic strength. In the presence of microgram amounts of ferrous ion or hydrogen peroxide, the generated hydroxyl radical reacted with both 5,5-diphenyl-1,2-oxazolinedione and 5,5-diphenyl-1,2-oxazolinedione from which a linear decrease in the absorbance of the reaction medium was observed in a concentration-dependent manner. The method is simple and rapid; it is highly sensitive because the extinction coefficient for 5,5-diphenyl-1,2-oxazolinedione is very high $(3.0 \times 10(4))$ L

In my case, I don't have a way for the IdP to provide the user's password to the webapp. The IdP just sends the username and "return to idp" is the only option I have. What is the best way to perform password authentication when a user is logging in on the webapp. A: The client application is normally responsible for asking the user for the password. That's what "return to idp" means. The client then performs a redirect to your application. Your application authenticates the user and if successful then redirects back to your IdP on behalf of the user. Your IdP can then redirect the user back to your application on the client's behalf. This way the user's credentials are never sent to your backend app server. You can use HttpOnly cookies to eliminate the possibility of the client's server viewing the user's credentials. This page has a good description of the entire process. State-dependent social play in the guinea pig (Cavia aperea). The term 'state dependence' refers to a situation where a behaviour, once acquired, persists unless its cognitive context is altered. State dependence is widely observed in humans and is implicated in the development of mental and physical health conditions. Whilst psychological studies of state dependence in rats and other species are well developed, few such studies exist in nonhuman primates. The current study examined the relationship between the 1cb139a0ed
