With the development of communication technology, various communication systems such as wireless communication systems have been developed. For the development of such communication technologies, various technologies have been incorporated into such communication systems, and also research on new communication technologies is being actively conducted. The wireless communication technology has attracted special attention because it can provide an inexpensive, lightweight, and reliable communication service. In particular, a next generation wireless communication technology including a relay station as a new communication device as well as a macro base station, is attracting much attention. In a conventional radio communication system, a base station directly performs communication with a terminal. However, in a future communication system including a relay station and/or a user equipment (UE) performing a relay function, an advanced technology for using two or more types of nodes with varied functions such as a macro cell base station (BS), a relay station, and a UE for communicating with one or more other nodes has come to attention.Numerous devices exist for providing the deadlock protection function, such as the locks available from Milwaukee Industrial Tool Company and certain safety locks sold by the Buck Knives Company. Personal watercraft (PWC) are relatively small watercraft that the rider operates via a handlebar that is coupled to a propulsion unit of the watercraft. An engine of the watercraft is mounted in the watercraft, typically between the propulsion unit and the hull of the watercraft. The engine is coupled to a drive shaft, and the drive shaft is coupled to the propulsion unit, which propels the watercraft through the water. The handlebar is coupled to the engine and, in turn, to the drive shaft of the engine to power the propulsion unit, thereby propelling the watercraft. PWC have become increasingly popular, and with that increased popularity, the market has developed PWC with greater performance specifications. In particular, more powerful engines have been developed for the propulsion units. Unfortunately, greater performance PWC are generally not as stable and as stable in small water waves and water swells that lower performing engines. An operator of a PWC is often not a professional operator, and in particular, the PWC that the operator operates often has a higher horsepower engine than the power that the operator is capable of driving. To enable the operator to drive the PWC at a reasonable speed, the engines are often configured to operate at a higher idle speed and/or a higher speed. Unfortunately, the larger horsepower engines also produce louder engine noises. These louder engine noises sometimes drive the operator away from the watercraft in response to the engine noises. The present invention provides a noise reduction system that reduces the engine noise of a PWC. One aspect of the present invention provides a personal watercraft having a hull, a propulsion unit, and an engine. The engine is mounted to the hull, and drives the propulsion unit. The engine includes a first cylinder that defines a first longitudinal axis and an air intake opening proximate the first cylinder.
