Cracked Version of Nest App.GPG signing with KMail I've a weird question: I have GTK 3.6.4 installed on my Fedora 22 system and I installed KMail on it (it provides the bundled KIOslave, which needs GTK 3.5). Problem is, KMail always tries to use GPG when signing a mail when I'm using my KMail with the bundled KIOslave. I couldn't really find out why this happens: In KMail's "Settings > Mail Accounts", there is no option to enable/disable signed messages for specific accounts. If I remove the bundled KIOslave with `dnf remove KIOslave`, KMail keeps using GPG when signing a mail. Also, if I remove the GTK 3.6.4-really, why isn't KMail running?Q: Can any ssh client detect a ssh server not returning plain ssh hello/session banner? I'm currently participating in a competition, where I must write a server based on linux 5.1, which must listen on a specific port, receive a command, and print some stats. However, the server must be able to be run by any ssh client, and should as such listen on any port. I chose to use OpenSSH as my sshd server, since it was the most reliable and had good support/documentation. I wrote a server, which as expected does what the spec requires. However, because the vendor did not write his client to login first, I get a completely empty string from the
