TheÂ .I wasn't able to get a thread going from the right section, so I'll put this one up. I've been thinking about the idea of combining the best parts of the C&O/Keiller stacks and have an IRL version of my "Best of both worlds" in mind. This is just a rough idea, which is subject to change during the build. Any thoughts or any help getting this build into reality would be appreciated. My "IRL" design has an operational center console and armrest (or console if you prefer). Then I would put a 15" MH monitor face down on the center console between the seats and an iRiver H100 with a 15" display. I would then put 2 ceiling mounted 44" LCD TVs up with custom controls/ejects or easily swapped out as needed. I would also have an I-Port jukebox in the console with an external CD player and an I-Port MOD system that would have a USB connection to my PC (cable management?). I would have a power cube to the right of the console that would be connected to a power supply that would source 120vac and 5v to the cube and the jukebox. This power cube would then wirelessly back to the jukebox for wireless charging. Then the stereo would have a USB extension cord with the top that would plug into the cube. The system would have turn select and mute, etc. I believe I can build this all from the ground up for about $1800, but I would like to see what you all think first. If I can get this to work there's no reason it can't be expanded to 2 seats with the same setup. I can handle the console/arm and the cube. The remaining items are up to you. The one thing I'm not sure about are the floor brackets for the monitors. I would use L brackets that would be nailed into the floor. This way they could be easily moved from one area of the boat to another. 6d1f23a050
